

“Seeding Global Collaboration” Method and Academic Disciplines

This blogsite swings the whole effort into the full perspective of a new functional collaboration in all sciences. We are on the first two pages of the first chapter of Lonergan’s Method in Theology. We are—recalling the problem of strained stretchings of the imagination mentioned in the blog re genuine democracy—battling to see the futility of the settled tradition of academic disciplines tossing opinions about in a cloud of learning. We need to identify within our own efforts the new learning and the flaws of present conventions. But we need also to feel our way towards turning those flaws and their sick effects into fragile seeds of new recurrence-schemes, tadpole-twists towards the hearty frog-stroke.

Phil McShane